Your assessment results will compare your performance against other project managers in a similar industry!

Why participate in an assessment of your project management skills?

The most elite professionals seek metrics that can help them understand their strengths and weaknesses! These metrics are sometimes difficult to derive in a professional environment. Our development team has placed significant time and effort into creating a tool that can quickly provide measurements of your knowledge and skills in eleven assessed areas. Our proprietary method and tool uses a three-pronged approach of self, scenario-based, and supervisor assessments, to provide you with a complete picture of your current skill levels. You can use the results of this assessment as a springboard from which you will leverage strengths and consciously improve upon weaknesses.

Top 10 immediate benefits:

1. Receive a comprehensive knowledge/skills report
2. Receive a customized training needs report
3. Reflect on your skill levels through a self-assessment
4. Apply your skills during a scenario-based assessment
5. See where your supervisor rates your skill levels
6. Clearly identify your strengths and weaknesses
7. Understand strengths you can leverage for success
8. Identify weaknesses upon which you can improve
9. See how your skills compare to industry averages
10. If you participate with others from your company, you will be able to identify strengths, weaknesses, and training needs across your organization

This assessment program was built by Project Management Institute (PMI®) Charter Member Registered Education Providers.

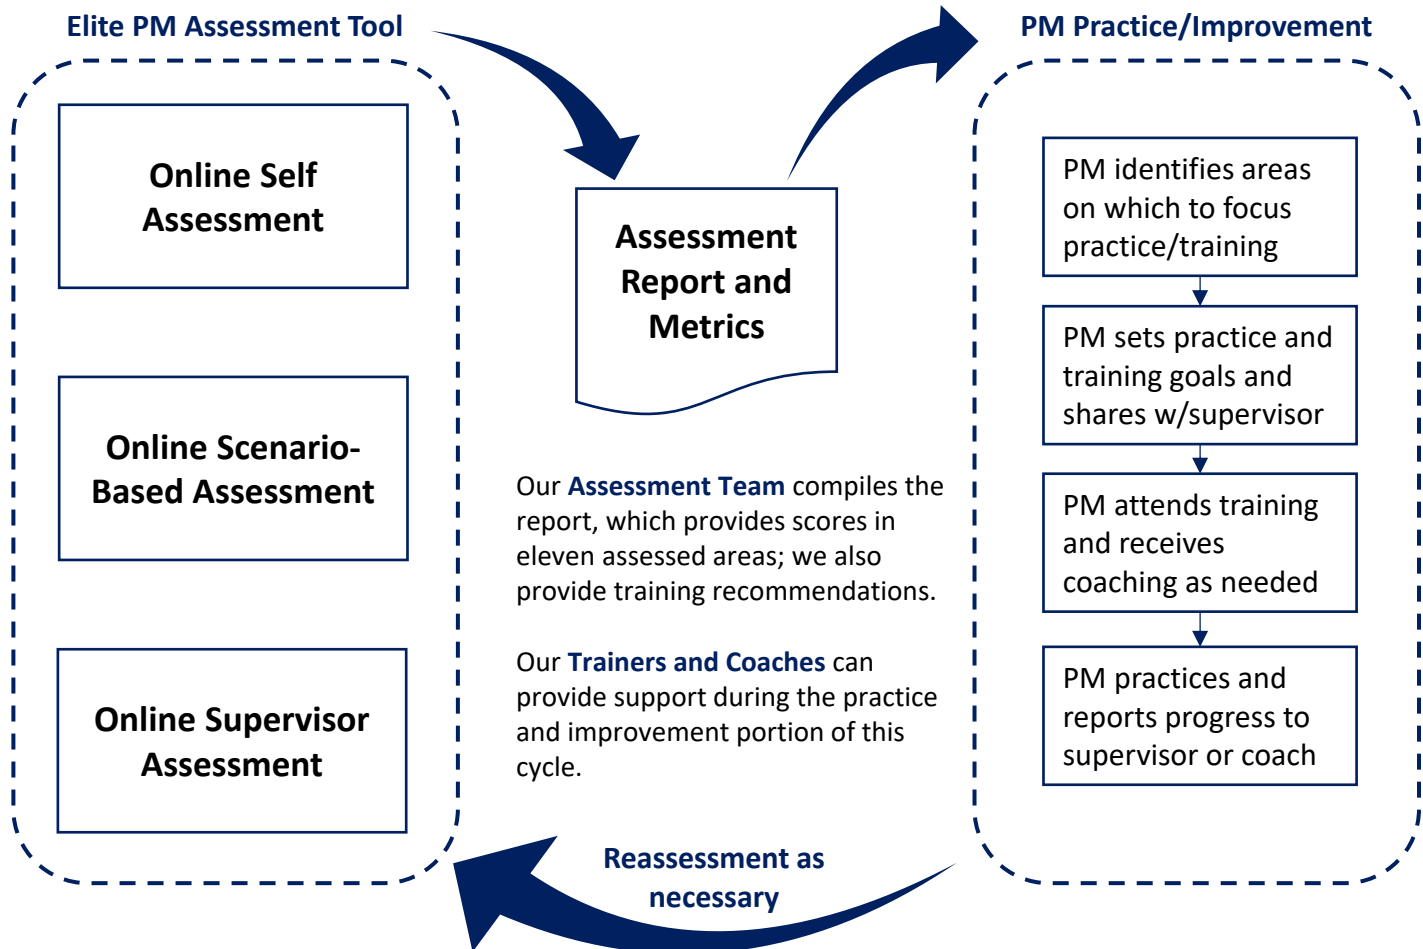

What should I do after I receive my assessment results?

People learn and improve skills through focused practice. Elite athletes understand this concept and use statistics and metrics to identify specific areas of their game that require practice. For example, baseball players use batting averages and hitting location percentages to help them improve their hitting. Golfers use driving distance and accuracy metrics to help them improve their drives. And, basketball players use field goal percentages at different spots on the court to help them know how to focus their shooting practice. Similarly, you can use the metrics from this assessment to target specific project management skills that you need to practice. You should then seek necessary training and practice those specific skills that need improvement—you should also continue leveraging your strengths to produce success.

Our proprietary assessment process

We use the following three-pronged approach of self, scenario-based, and supervisor assessments to provide a Project Manager (PM) with the information necessary to improve his or her performance:

Who should participate?

Seasoned veterans, new project managers, company leaders, and everyone in-between will find this assessment and reporting process to be useful! It is always good to see where you stand with respect to the knowledge and skill areas that are critical to the project management profession. It is also important to identify areas for practice and improvement!
